

History:

This message has been replied to and forwarded .

Please see the videos on <http://csgfree.rainbowgateway.com>

Particularly the ones in the Marcellus in Pennsylvania.

Farmers accounts there have been shocking, photographs of dead stock, water being supplied to them in bottles by gas companies, because their water had become explosive.

Some have had to leave their homes as the methane monitors provided them, went thru the roof, causing fears that their house would blow up.

Many farms were rendered useless as the roads and infrastructure made it impractical to farm.

Methane levels and formaldehyde have cased illness in workers and residents, and of course Radon is another threat that is elusive and deadly.

In California, the gas companies have out bid the farmers for water, so the food production will suffer from not only the lack of water, but the return of toxic water to the system.

Farming, wildlife, human habitation, cannot co-exist with this industry.

Thank You
Sharyn Proctor

PO Box 8078
Dunoon
NSW 2480

--